Barrio Santa Cruz

A treasure behind every corner.

The present-day districts of Santa Cruz, Santa María la Blanca and San Bartolomé make up what was once the old Jewish quarter of Seville. Vestiges of bygone times can still be found in its narrow streets, small squares and passages.

There is no doubt that the Callejón del Agua is a must-see street on your tour of the labyrinthine Santa Cruz quarter.

Next to the city wall, and parallel to the gardens of the Real Alcázar, this street was used to carry water from the Caños de Carmona to the Reales Alcázares. Hence its current name.

Museo Arqueológico

Sevilla.

A journey through the civilizations of Seville. The Archaeological Museum of Seville has its origins in the late nineteenth century, when a public collection of antiquities was created, most of them extracted from the Roman city Itálica. In the twentieth century it consolidated and expanded with the transfer from the old Convent of La Merced to its current headquarters: the Fine Arts pavilion, created by Aníbal González.
